M-G-M's Spike and Tyke DISAPPEARING DECOY

GO FETCH!

I'M PROUD OF THAT SHOT!

WE'RE LUCKY HE SHOT A DUCK SO CLOSE TO THE BANK!

BRING HIM ALONG, BOYS!
TRA LA♪

WE DIDN'T EVEN WET A PAW!

MY MOST PRIZED TROPHY! I'LL HAVE IT STUFFED!

THOSE DING-DONG DOGS FETCHED THE DECOY INSTEAD OF THE DUCK!

UH-OH! WE GOOFED!

HE'S FURIOUS!

HOW DID THAT HAPPEN, DAD?

DON'T KNOW, BUT LET'S FIGURE IT OUT IN A SAFER PLACE!

OH, SPIKE! TYKE!

THE WATER ISN'T SO COLD, ONCE YOU GET IN, TYKE!

AND COLD WATER'S BETTER THAN HIS HOT TEMPER!

QUACK?

Bertie Bird swooped in for a landing on a snowy twig beside his brother Billie.

"Those people are roasting hot dogs down at the foot of the hill," he twittered. "They are having a fine winter picnic, and no one even invited me."

"You didn't think they would, did you?" scolded Billie. "People never know birds are around."

Billie shook the snow from his wings and pointed to the hillside where Tommy Porter and his friends were trying out their new flying-saucer sleds. "Look at those boys go!" he exclaimed.

"That really looks exciting," said Bertie. "It must be lots of fun."

"Chow time," called Tommy's mother from the foot of the hill. "Come on, everybody."

"Let's go, Billie; that means us," twittered Bertie. "She said 'everybody.'"

"Forget it," cheeped Billie. "You won't get a handout. Mrs. Porter won't even see you, much less feed you."

But Bertie Bird had an idea. He flew off gaily down the hill, following the children on their whirling, swooping sleds. Two minutes later he was back, a small aluminum pie tin in his beak.

"Hey, look, Billie," he twittered. "They're serving little pies for everybody down there. I found this in a trash can."

"What good is an empty pie tin?"

"It'll be my new flying-saucer sled," said Bertie, flying toward the hill. "They'll see me all right when I show up in this."

At the top of the hill, Billie caught up with him. "Bertie Bird," he chattered, "you get out of that flying-saucer sled this minute. Birds don't slide downhill. You'll break your little neck."

But Bertie wasn't listening. "Wheee!" he whistled gaily as he pushed off. Down the hill he whirled with Brother Billie flying in frantic circles over his head.

"Cheep, cheep, cheep," twittered Billie. "Bertie, you're going too fast! LOOK OUT!"

CRASH! The homemade flying-saucer sled struck a rock which was half-hidden in the snow. The force of the sudden stop threw Bertie forward, and he landed headfirst in a big snowdrift.

"Hey, Bertie! Where are you?" twittered Billie, lighting on a bush nearby.

But Bertie was off and rolling, headed down the hill, gathering snow as he went.

"Oh, look," said Tommy Porter, putting down the hot dog he was eating. "Here comes a great big snowball! It's going to hit our basket, Mom!"

But before Mrs. Porter could lift the picnic basket, the snowball crashed against it. Snow bounced away in all directions, and there on the ground lay Bertie Bird, too dizzy to get up.

"How could a bird get into a snowball?" asked Tommy.

"He looks cold and hungry," said Mrs. Porter. "Let's give him something to eat."

Bertie bounded to his feet, and Billie fluttered overhead, chirping, "Me, too!"

"What a meal that was," chirped Bertie on the way home. "People are really nice. They'll feed you if they see you!"

"All the same, Bertie," Billie scolded, "that was a very foolish thing you did. You might have broken a leg."

"I didn't though," said Bertie. "And what I did was a lot more sensible than sitting on that twig, waiting for dinnertime to come for everyone but us!"
